The Norwegian fruit steamship Holquin arrived in the lower bay early resterday morning from Cuba. Immediately on anchoring, her easign was pulled down and then holsted again, bottom side up. The lookouts on the police boat Patrol Mormed Capt, Hooker, who gave orders to steam in the fruiter's direction. Detectives Wood and Sullivan were sent on fireman, on the complaint of Capt. Ingmar Loud.

The Captain tells the following story: "About the middle of March we put into the port of Banas, Culas, to load. On the 29th we were ready te sail. Just before weighing anchor Lee became verry sullen. When the engineer ordered him to go to work he refused, and streek the engineer. I was called in, and when I ordered him up for a time, but let him out when we got to sea. Since then he has done his work well, but, nevertheless, I intend to press charges against him."

The members of the crew say that Lee was a good worker. Ill feeling toward the Captain has been aroused among them, and now that they are on short step do not hesitate to let their disapproval be known.

The prisoner was arraigned at the Tombs, and Justice Taintor turned him over to United States Marshal Grant.
